What makes Brayden Scott smile? "Basketball," said the 7-year-old Noblesville boy who turned 8 years old earlier this month. He is a second-grader at Hazel Dell Elementary. He was found enjoying Harlem Wizards Courtside Player perks as he sported a Wizards basketball jersey and got to meet the Wizards players before the Wizards vs. Mighty Millers (teachers and principals) game on Nov. 1 at The Mill at Noblesville High School. He got to do the layup line, played a basketball game at halftime and learned some tricks and watched the Wizards do some hoops and alley-oops. The event was a fundraiser for Noblesville Schools Education Foundation. The Wizards have helped NSEF offer fundraisers since 2016. The last Wizards game was 2021. Brayden snagged some Harlem Wizards autographs on his basketball and on his jersey that he wore with a Harlem Wizards lanyard. He is the son of Shawn and Krista Scott. It was his first time as a Wizards Courtside Player. He heard about the event at school, and his parents bought advance tickets so he could enjoy the Wizards experience. Most fun about the evening? "Meeting the players and getting the autographs." What else? Brayden plays second-grade Millers basketball. Favorite school subject? "Recess." Favorite lunch meal? "The donut holes. And sometimes they have waffles."

Ketchum stated that he was seeking information about the exact site of Noblesville's old mineral spring, later called

Wellness Council Of Indiana Offers New Stigma-Free Toolkit For Hoosier Workplaces

Learn Best Practices for Mental Health and Substance Use Disorder

As study after study has shown, in today's workforce it's imperative for employers to create a healthy work environment for their employees and cultivate positive outcomes for them. This not only includes building a safer physical work environment but also creating a stigma-free workplace culture.

A new complimentary resource, "A Mental Health Stigma-Free Workplace Culture Toolkit" from the Wellness Council of Indiana (WCI), a subsidiary of the Indiana Chamber of Commerce, guides employers on steps they can take to reduce the stigma associated with mental health conditions as well as substance use disorder.

"In a workplace culture where mental illnesses or substance use disorder isn't stigmatized, employees are more likely to be aware of available resources, enter treatment sooner and begin recovery earlier," offers WCI Executive Director Jennifer Pferrer.

"When you accomplish that, it can foster employee loyalty and retention as well as enhance awareness and acceptance."

While one in five U.S. adults - including one in four Hoosiers - suffers from some form of mental health disorder, most aren't getting the treatment they need, Pferrer says.

"One of the main reasons is stigma. There are still negative stereotypes about mental illness that persist in and out of the workplace - and collectively we must work to erase these perceptions for the benefit of both workers and employers."

Mental illnesses directly affect an employee's ability to perform effectively at work and are associated with absenteeism and lost productivity. In fact, 80% of people with depression report some level of functional impairment.

The good news, Pferrer notes, is that treatment works, with many mental health conditions treated with talk therapy and/or medication.

"Treatment has been shown to improve productivity and effectiveness on the job. And as an employer, you can't afford to ignore mental health," she continues. "Employers who invest even $1 on mental health can see a $4 return."

When it comes to substance misuse, companies have felt the consequences for decades through absenteeism, loss of productivity, safety issues and poor job performance.

By being a recovery-friendly workplace, employers can accomplish several things. For example, it encourages a healthy and safe environment where employees and their communities can create positive change and eliminate barriers for those affected by addiction.

When discussing a "recovery-friendly workplace" within this toolkit, it means a workplace supporting its communities by recognizing recovery from substance use disorder as a strength and being willing to work intentionally with people in recovery.

A chronic disease, substance use disorder does not discriminate based on socioeconomic status, gender, age or race. According to the National Survey on Drug Use & Health, more than 20 million people in the United States are affected by it - that's one in three American households directly impacted by this disease.

"Fortunately, a substance use disorder is a treatable, manageable disease. And like treatment for other chronic diseases such as diabetes, asthma and heart disease, the treatment for it should be ongoing and frequently assessed," Pferrer states.

She encourages Hoosier employers and any interested organizations to download the toolkit at www.wellnessindiana.org.

"We want to see more and more companies become stigma-free - to be an employer that promotes a culture of openness, acceptance and understanding about employees' overall health and well-being."

Alzheimer's Association Offers Holiday Gift Guide For People Living With Dementia And Their Caregivers

110,000 Hoosiers are living with Alzheimer's disease, 216,000 are serving as caregivers

Holiday shopping and gift-giving can often be challenging, but even more so when shopping for a person living with dementia. There are more than 6 million Americans living with Alzheimer's disease. Depending on the stage of disease, some well-intentioned gifts may no longer be appropriate or practical for the person.

For the holiday season, the Alzheimer's Association has released its 2023 Holiday Gift Guide, offering gift ideas for individuals living in the early, middle and late-stages of Alzheimer's disease. The guide also includes gift suggestions aimed at keeping those living with dementia engaged and involved in everyday tasks, as well as gift ideas for the 11 million family members and friends across the country serving as unpaid caregivers for these individuals.

5 gifts for people living with Alzheimer's – in the early-stages

- Post-it notes or an erasable white board to list reminders or the day's activities.
- Baskets or trays that can be labeled within cabinets or drawers.
- Gift cards for ride-sharing services or a favorite activity (golf, movie, restaurant) allowing the person to remain active.

- GPS trackers (bracelets, watches, small trackers) or enrollment in a safe return program to keep the person safe.

- A "memory" calendar featuring family photos – write-in special family occasions such as birthdays and anniversaries.

5 gifts for people living with Alzheimer's – in the middle-to-late stages

- Music playlists that include the person's favorite artists or songs.

- Comfortable, loose-fitting clothing that is easy to put on, remove and wash, such as sweat suits, slip-on blouses/shirts, non-slip socks, Velcro shoes, wrinkle-free nightgowns, nightshirts or a fluffy bathrobe.

- Framed photographs or a photo collage created specifically for your loved one. Insert the names of the people in the photos to help with identification.

- Soothing gifts that can help with anxiety like a handheld massage ball or a soft blanket.

- Adaptive dining equipment such as no-spill cups, plate guards and silverware with specifically designed handles that enables greater independence during meals.

5 gifts to help with everyday tasks and keep the person living with Alzheimer's engaged:

- A memory phone that can store pictures with the names and contact information of family and friends.

- Nightlights that activate automatically when it gets dark.

- A digital clock with large type to indicate date and time.

- An outing to a movie, play or concert, sporting event, museum or possibly an organized holiday shopping trip with friends and family.

- Engage your loved one in making homemade gifts for the family, painting ornaments, decorating stockings, table setting, scrapbooking or other activity gifts.

5 gifts for dementia caregivers

- The most important gift you can give a dementia caregiver is the gift of time. In fact, just a 20-minute break each day can help lower a caregiver's stress and help avoid burnout.

- Self-made coupons for cleaning the house, cooking a meal, mowing the lawn or shoveling the driveway.

- Gift cards and certificates for restaurants or meal delivery, laundry/dry cleaning services, lawn care services, computer/technology support, maid services, and personal pampering services such as massages and pedicures.

- Books – in addition to giving novels on the caregiver's "must read" list, there are a number of books on caregiving and maintaining self-health.

- Self-care items such as a bundle of personal care items (moisturizers, bath bombs and soaks, foot creams, scrubs, soaps).

For more tips on how families affected by Alzheimer's and other dementias can safely enjoy time with family and friends during the holidays, visit alz.org/holidays. The Alzheimer's Association provides information, programs and services at no charge to help families facing Alzheimer's disease or another dementia. PAULA From Page A1

Llewellyn Spring. He expressed the hope the newspaper would print his letter and jog the memories of some of this area's older residents, prompting them
to provide that location.
He also shared some information of his own regarding the spring.
According to Ketchum,
the spring was situated on the east bank of White River across from an island
Native Americans called Bather's Island because thousands of "red men" went there to bathe and drink the spring water.
He noted that the water's healing properties had been discovered by a young chief as early as 1687. ("Rheumatism, deranged stomach,
torpid liver, poisoned blood, chronic sores were cured, by bathing and drinking.")
Ketchum went on to add that the chief had kept a record on parchment of the names, deeds and burial sites of some of the tribe's braves, written in "hieroglyphics" the chief himself had invented.
This document also supposedly recorded the location of the chief's own grave, "a certain number of paces in a certain direction
from this Spring."
After the chief's death,
the chronicle was passed on to the oldest male child in the Ketchum family. When it reached George Ketchum, George had either William or John Conner (it's not clear which) translate it into English and copy it onto a "piece of leather made from the skin of a mountain goat."
Wykeo Ketchum claimed to possess that document.
Ketchum's letter was written from Indianapolis,
where he said he'd stopped overnight on his way to Washington, DC to conduct some tribal business. He indicated that he intended to visit Noblesville on his return journey to the South Dakota/Nebraska area.
When I first ran across Ketchum's letter several years ago, I found the timing suspicious. The correspondence was dated only three days after the first reference to Llewellyn Spring appeared in the Ledger.
It seemed highly coincidental someone from out of state would suddenly be asking about the spring,
just as it was starting to be heavily promoted.
A closer look at the letter made me even more skeptical.
What Native American
would date the spring's discovery to a precise "1687" and where in Indiana would you get leather made from a mountain goat?
The document Ketchum describes sounds a lot like the Walam Olum or "Red Record," a history of the Lenape/Delaware people that was supposedly discovered by a Frenchman in the 1830s. The Walam Olum has been considered a hoax
since the 1990s.
A search of Google,
newspapers.com, Ancestry
and the U. S. census failed to produce any other references to anyone named
"Wykeo," and a Lenape/
Delaware tribal history
website that lists Lewis Ketchum's sons shows
them all with English
names.
I couldn't find a followup story about "Wykeo" in later Ledgers, either.
So much information on this subject is missing — like how Joseph Morse, the man credited with starting the Llewellyn Spring mania, learned about the spring in the first place —
that I can't conclusively prove or disprove the letter's legitimacy.
It could be genuine, but my gut feeling is that it was a hoax, concocted by some Noblesville businessman who wanted to attract people to the "Indian medical spring" in order to boost the local economy.
Thanks to Nancy Massey
for help with the "Wykeo" research.

tion into its next chapter.

Steve Rupp, Chairman of the Board, expresses confidence in Albright's ability to excel in her new position: "Courtney Albright has demonstrated to the Board of Directors during this past year, that she not only possesses the skills and background for this next step in her career, but also the desire and passion. This year has been one of significant change and Albright has been asked to perform not only her job, but also the job of President since it was vacated earlier this year. We could not be happier that Albright is matriculating into this role and are confident she will be incredibly successful."

Albright's transition to the role of President comes with unanimous support from the Board of Directors, the existing staff, member partners, and various community stakeholders, including Downtown Westfield Association, Westfield Welcome, and incoming City officials.

As President, Albright will play a pivotal role in shaping the future of the Westfield Chamber of Commerce, fostering growth, and strengthening community partnerships. Albright shares her excitement about this new position: "I'm genuinely thrilled and honored to step into the role of President at the Westfield Chamber of Commerce and DWA. Westfield truly holds a special place in my heart. Thank you for trusting me with this vital responsibility. As I step into this new role, please know that your voice matters, and I'm here to champion it. Feel free to reach out as my door is always open. Together, let's infuse Westfield with new energy and collective success. Our future is bright, and I'm excited to shape it alongside each of you!"

The Westfield Chamber of Commerce was founded in 1981 and serves over 400 member businesses through its core values to support, unite, & lead. It is an integral part of the extreme growth Westfield has experienced making it the fastest-growing City in Indiana and one of the fastest-growing in the entire US. The Chamber serves as a central voice for Westfield businesses and holds many events throughout the month along with the Young Professionals Council.

Albright will officially start her new position on December 1st.

items to Harvest Food Bank and a new toy to the Noblesville Fire Department's Toy Drive.

And this year, to top off the annual holiday luncheon, the Chamber adds a little meat. Noblesville Schools Supt. Dr. Daniel G. Hile will deliver the annual State of the Schools that will include academic achievements, workforce development, school finances, construction and future planning for the district, which this school year enrolls 10,300 students.

The Noblesville School Board recently green-lighted about $42 million in funding for an academic and performing arts expansion at NHS. The funding will be financed through a bond with no increase to the tax rate and no use of referendum or education dollars, said district spokesperson Marnie Cooke.

Dr. Hile will share more about the addition during his State of the Schools presentation at the Chamber event.

Performing arts holds a special place in the superintendent's heart, as he is a former member of Indiana University's Singing Hoosiers and is a former high school choir director, as well as a previous principal, assistant principal and teacher. In addition to a doctorate in educational leadership from Purdue University, he holds a master's degree in education administration from Indiana University Fort Wayne and a bachelor's degree in music education from Indiana University. He has been superintendent since July 1, 2022.

The Chamber Holiday Luncheon fittingly moves to Noblesville Schools Community Center, which is next to the high school and new Beaver Stadium on Field Drive. The luncheon is 11 a.m. to 1 p.m., with the community invited to attend. Tickets are still available at www.noblesvillechamber.com.

Our daughter, a senior, is a member of the NHS Singers, directed by John Neubauer and assistant directed by Julianne Fowler, and will be performing with her choir at the luncheon, with student musicians. Eight years ago, when our daughter was a member of North Elementary music teacher Janine Krent's 11-member fourth-grade Hand Chime Choir, we proudly watched her perform while guests were arriving at the luncheon. I always look forward to the Chamber Holiday

Luncheon to hear the talents of our wonderful Noblesville students.

Want that warm and fuzzy holiday feeling? An opportunity to learn more about Noblesville Schools and to hear about this magnificent high school building addition coming? Then get your tickets now to Noblesville Chamber of Commerce's Holiday Luncheon.

Kevin Brinegar Reflects On Decades-Long Career At Chamber, Statehouse

By Whitney Downard
Indiana Capital Chronicle

From his first legislative session in 1981 to his last in 2023, Kevin Brinegar has personally witnessed some of Indiana's most pivotal, historic moments — either crunching numbers for Senate Republicans or leading the state's Chamber of Commerce.

The Indiana University graduate from "the wrong side of the tracks" in Monroe County has seen the chamber's revenue streams more than double and underlying entities nearly triple in his 22 years as President and CEO — a position that combines his penchant for retaining data, navigating legislative morasses and shaping public policy.

"This has been the perfect job for me. ... This job fills that appetite of wanting to make a difference for Indiana and for the people of Indiana, not just the businesses that we represent," Brinegar said in an interview with the Indiana Capital Chronicle.

"I feel so blessed, particularly given my very humble beginning," Brinegar continued. "To be here and be able to do this, and just have this passion for Indiana and trying to help move the state ever-forward. And obviously, this is a great place to do it."

In 2024, his successor, Vanessa Green Sinderson, will take the reins. Brinegar will step back into a consultant position after four decades of legislative sessions, allowing him to pass on his wealth of knowledge.

"I've got 31 years of history with the chamber. Sometimes I joke around and say, 'That's no reason to keep me around just because I'm the historian,'" Brinegar said.

He reflected on his achievements with the organization, which serves to advocate on behalf of Indiana's hundreds of thousands of businesses and also provides workforce training seminars and leadership summits.

He highlighted his efforts to improve Indiana's tax and regulatory climate for businesses and serving as a resource during the COVID-19 pandemic.

Just on and on things that I would — as a poor kid growing up in a poor neighborhood — would have never thought possible. — Kevin Brinegar, outgoing CEO and President of the Indiana Chamber of Commerce

Others pointed to his commitment to including a mix of voices in one of the state's most powerful lobbying forces, including top Republicans and Democrats as well as racial and ethnic diversity.

Frank Sullivan Jr., a former Indiana Supreme Court justice and state budget director, said those chamber efforts told him "that its CEO has been a broad-gauge thinker who wants to make sure that all parts of Indiana society are included in its economic success and are important parts of its business community."

"I guess what I'm saying is that I've seen, in his leadership of the chamber, his same big-picture approach to doing what's best for the state that I saw when I worked with him in close quarters in the crucial role of budget debates in the late 80s and early 90s," Sullivan added.

What happened in 1989

Sullivan and Brinegar first crossed paths following the 1988 election that shook up politics in more ways than one: not only would there be a Democrat as governor for the first time in decades, but the House had an even 50-50 split and the Senate had the slimmest of Republican majorities.

Democrat Evan Bayh's election also signaled a new era for Republicans after several terms under fiscally conservative leaders who reined in spending impulses. For legislators going into the 1989 budget-writing session, it was a chance to act upon years of pent-up demands.

"There was an almost unrestrained appetite on the part of both Democrats and Republicans in the Indiana House of Representatives to spend and spend and spend like there was no tomorrow," Sullivan said.

Bayh named Frank Sullivan as his budget director and it was during this time that Sullivan started a yearslong friendship with Brinegar, who was by then a fiscal analyst with the Indiana Senate Republicans.

"We could not have had a more closely divided political situation," Sullivan said. "We were both operating in this intensely competitive political environment and the intensely uncertain fiscal environment."

"And despite all of that, I found — though Kevin Brinegar and I were of opposite political parties and had quite opposite political interests — I found him to be, at all times, incredibly professional (and) always looking out for the best interest of the state," he continued.

That didn't mean that there weren't any "political tricks," Sullivan said.

The House passed a bloated budget with unprecedented education spending but most believed the more fiscally restrained Senate chamber would enact something more reasonable.

"There had been a pattern of years where the House would send a higher level of budget and then the Senate would cut it back and negotiate," Brinegar agreed, noting he'd started his term with Senate Republicans a few cycles earlier.

"I was concerned that, if the Senate was too harsh, that it might hurt them in the election and they already had a narrow margin. And the new governor wouldn't say a word — he didn't say whether he liked it or disliked this budget," Brinegar said.

Brinegar said either he or one of his Senate bosses had the idea to just pass the budget as-is, with no amendments, so it'd go straight to the governor's desk.

And they did just that, forcing Bayh to veto it and call for a special session.

Though the negotiations "put us on the spot, politically," Sullivan said it turned out to be a win for Bayh's administration by demonstrating his "fiscal responsibility" and didn't hurt his friendship with Brinegar.

"We couldn't have been too upset with these people who had done us such a marvelous political favor," Sullivan said.

Over the next few years, Sullivan and Brinegar traveled together as part of the state's fiscal team, visiting state parks, death row and the public universities before Brinegar joined the chamber in 1992 and Bayh appointed Sullivan to the Supreme Court in 1993.

Importance of education

High school freshman Brinegar didn't care as much about academics as he did about sports. Over his four years he constantly competed, whether it was football, basketball, baseball or track.

But his mother, an employee at Indiana University, told him during his first semester of school that Bs and Cs, while good enough for him to play, wouldn't be good enough for her.

"She sat me down and she said, 'I want you to go to college and to do that, you need to not bring home anything less than a B. And if you do, then I'm not going to let you play,'" Brinegar recalled.

Born to teenage parents who divorced when he was two, Brinegar's first home was a camper trailer parked in his grandparent's backyard. Going to IU — where he could play basketball and take classes in the summer to finish his undergraduate degree and master's in business administration in five years — opened doors for him.

Since then, Brinegar has toured Asia with the Indiana Pacers, been in a briefing room with a sitting president and known six sitting governors personally — only the start of an extensive list of accomplishments.

"Just on and on things that I would — as a poor kid growing up in a poor neighborhood — would have never thought possible," Brinegar said.

Working at the chamber

When Brinegar sought the position leading the chamber around 2001 — Sullivan personally called two men in the hiring process "to tell them of my very high regard for Kevin and how I thought that he would be just perfect for the job."

"I have no idea whether my calls to those two men made any difference but I was delighted that he got the job," Sullivan said. "And I think his performance has proven that my prediction was right."

Brinegar said he wouldn't trade those years with the state "for anything," with much of his knowledge helping to inform his years lobbying on behalf of the chamber. Since that time, much has changed at the Statehouse — conference committees are no longer held at hotel bars, legislative staffers oversee their own printing operations, lawmakers play fewer (public) tricks on one another and technology allows for remote viewing and testimony.

Indeed the very technology Brinegar used to proofread and organize the state's budget — processors from Wang Laboratories and Lotus 123, an early version of Excel — no longer exist. But he still keeps his yellowed calculator from that time and sometimes uses it to compute his expense reports.

His slowly emptying office holds other memorabilia, including not one, but two Sagamore of the Wabash Awards from Bayh and sitting Gov. Eric Holcomb.

Brinegar's departure from the organization brings changes for the 101-year-old chamber, which is expanding its office space to offer more in-house training and events. Recently, leaders have repeatedly pushed for priorities outside the traditional realm for businesses, including quality of life issues like child care and health care costs.

Notably, in the wake of the backlash to the Religious Freedom Restoration Act, Brinegar and the chamber pushed to expand the state's civil rights law to include protections for sexual orientation and gender identity, signaling a willingness to tackle topics outside of corporate finance and regulations.

"The time has come for Indiana to expand protections against potential discrimination," Brinegar said at the time. "This action will increase the state's future business competitiveness in the recruitment, attraction and retention of talent, as well as enhance respect for all employers and employees."

As for unfinished business, Brinegar points to one lingering-yet-unsettled debate in Indiana politics: the high number of political units in Indiana, whether it's the number of counties or the number of school districts. Other, much larger states (in both population and area) have fewer of those units.

But efforts to reduce that number — even at the township level — have faced substantial, entrenched opposition, though Brinegar said that 85% of school districts continually lost population over the last decade.

"When you say school district consolidation, many people hear school consolidation and that's not necessarily what I mean. In some cases that might be," Brinegar said. "... But ... if you've got that few kids to spread your overhead over, you've got less dollars going into the classroom."

He noted that the state's smallest district has just 144 students, one of 20% of school districts with less than 1,000 students. More than half of corporations, 56%, have less than 2,000 — which some research suggests is the lowest student enrollment number for a district to operate efficiently and effectively.

Small districts such as these struggle to compete when it comes to class offerings and advanced placement test scores, he said, when so much has to pay for higher level district employees.

"That's something I'm going to urge them to keep beating the drum on," Brinegar said.
